STATUTES

28 U.S.C. § 2072	7
------------------------	---

STATEMENT OF INTEREST OF THE AMICUS

The Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America (the “Chamber”) is the world’s largest business federation, representing an underlying membership of more than three million businesses and organizations. The Chamber represents its members’ interests by, among other activities, filing briefs in cases implicating issues of vital concern to the nation’s business community. Many of the Chamber’s members are employers subject to Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (“Title VII”), 42 U.S.C. § 2000e (2003) et seq. The Chamber’s members devote extensive resources to developing employment practices and procedures, and developing compliance programs designed to ensure that their employment actions are consistent with Title VII and other legal requirements. If the panel’s decision stands, it will have a potentially destructive effect on the Chamber’s members, who are likely to face exposure to billions of dollars in new claims, without any opportunity to present the evidence in their own defense. All parties have consented to the filing of this brief.

ARGUMENT

The Chamber agrees with the arguments set forth in Wal-Mart’s Petition for Rehearing En Banc. It submits this brief to highlight the conflict between the panel's decision and Supreme Court precedent, the Rules Enabling Act, and the fundamental purposes of Title VII.

Put bluntly, the panel's decision purports to eliminate the single most important right granted to employers by Title VII – the right to present rebuttal evidence demonstrating that particular plaintiffs have not actually suffered from discrimination. This right is the mainstay of individual employment discrimination cases, providing the critical mechanism through which employers can answer a plaintiff's prima facie case of discrimination with evidence demonstrating that the plaintiff's alleged harm was not an instance of discrimination, but rather a legitimate employment decision based on the plaintiff's lack of qualifications, failure to seek a particular promotion, or some other legitimate business rationale. Stripping defendants of this right would gut the traditional Title VII analysis, reducing it to a mere exercise in establishing a prima facie case. Yet that is precisely what the panel's decision does, endorsing a procedure that permits plaintiffs to present a prima facie case based on statistical evidence, and then move straight to a determination of remedies, skipping entirely the defendant's right to present evidence in its defense.

That result is plainly wrong. The panel's decision conflicts with Supreme Court precedent recognizing an employer's fundamental rights under Title VII, and with the Rules Enabling Act, which mandates that substantive rights cannot be truncated simply to permit claims to be tried on a class basis. And it would have disastrous practical effects, pressuring employers to settle huge claims regardless of their merit and to adopt the kinds of quota-like policies that Title VII was enacted to prevent. Rehearing should be granted to correct the panel's decision.

I. THE PANEL'S DECISION WOULD DEPRIVE EMPLOYERS OF THE FUNDAMENTAL RIGHT TO PRESENT KEY REBUTTAL EVIDENCE

In the face of the "largest certified class in history," slip op. at 1368, the panel's decision purports to deny Wal-Mart the right to present crucial evidence in its own defense. Under the decision, plaintiffs will be permitted to proceed directly from demonstrating a prima facie case of classwide discrimination based on statistical and anecdotal evidence to a determination of remedies, without the employer being allowed to exercise its right to submit rebuttal evidence in its own defense. That fundamental right, guaranteed both by the Due Process Clause and by Title VII, would be swept aside in the name of convenience, based on the district court's conclusion that conducting individualized hearings would be "impractical on its face." Dukes v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 222 F.R.D. 137, 176 (N.D. Cal. 2004).

Convenient or not, it is well-established that every employer is entitled to put on evidence showing that particular plaintiffs are not entitled to relief because they were “denied an employment opportunity for lawful reasons.” Int’l Bhd. of Teamsters v. United States, 431 U.S. 324, 362 (1977); see also Reeves v. Sanderson Plumbing Prods. Inc., 530 U.S. 133, 148 (2000) (“an employer would be entitled to judgment as a matter of law if the record conclusively revealed some other, nondiscriminatory reason for the employer’s decision”). The opportunity to present case-specific rebuttal evidence of the lawful basis for an employment action (such as job qualifications, work performance, misconduct, economic need, or attendance) has been decisive in myriad employment discrimination cases. For example, in Coleman v. Quaker Oats Co., 232 F.3d 1271, 1282 (9th Cir. 2000), this Court affirmed summary judgment for an employer in an age discrimination case after the employer demonstrated that plaintiffs “were not as qualified as those employees chosen,” and plaintiffs were unable to show that this justification was pretextual. See also, e.g., Lyons v. England, 307 F.3d 1092, 1117 (9th Cir. 2002) (“whether [plaintiff was] as qualified as any of the promotion recipients is a factually intensive question best resolved by the jury”); Bateman v. United States Postal Serv., 151 F. Supp. 2d 1131, 1139-40 (N.D. Cal. 2001) (plaintiff could not overcome evidence that termination was based on misconduct, not race discrimination); Tempesta v. Motorola, Inc., 92 F. Supp. 2d 973, 980 (D. Ariz. 1999) (plaintiff could not show that he had applied for any positions).

The Supreme Court has confirmed that individualized hearings are an integral part of both individual Title VII cases and class actions, providing the employer with an opportunity to offer individualized substantive defenses to liability. In Teamsters, the Court explained that if plaintiffs prove that an employer has “engaged in a pattern of racial discrimination,” the burden “shift[s] to the employer to prove that individuals who reapply were not in fact victims of previous hiring discrimination.” Teamsters, 431 U.S. at 359 (internal quotation omitted). But plaintiffs’ prima facie evidence “d[oes] not conclusively demonstrate that all of the employer’s decisions were part of the proved discriminatory pattern and practice.” Id. at 359 n.45. Thus, in cases where plaintiffs seek individual monetary relief, “a district court must usually conduct additional proceedings” – i.e., individualized hearings – at which the employer can “demonstrate that the individual applicant was denied an employment opportunity for lawful reasons.” Id. at 361-62. For example, “the employer might show that there were other, more qualified persons who would have been chosen for a particular vacancy, or that the nonapplicant’s stated qualifications were insufficient.” Id. at 369 n.53. In short, the trial court “will have to make a substantial number of individual determinations in deciding which of the ... employees were actual victims of the company's discriminatory practices." Id. at 371-72 (emphasis added). See also Reid v. Lockheed Martin Aero Co., 205 F.R.D. 655, 687 n.35 (N.D. Ga. 2001) (employer has "the right to rebut the presumption that the adverse employment action was due to discrimination and to show that individual members of the class are not entitled to back pay").

The panel's decision in this case cannot be reconciled with Teamsters. The panel concedes that if plaintiffs successfully demonstrated a general practice of discrimination via statistics and anecdotes, they would be entitled only to a "rebuttable presumption that they are entitled to relief." Id. (emphasis added). Yet the trial plan approved by the panel wholly undermines this concession, giving the employer no opportunity whatsoever to "rebut" this presumption. Instead, after the prima facie stage, the case would immediately proceed to a "remedy stage" to be resolved pursuant to a "formula" and without individualized hearings. In approving this procedure, the panel decision flatly denies Wal-Mart the fundamental right, affirmed in Teamsters, to demonstrate that it had lawful reasons for denying particular class members promotions or higher pay.¹

¹ Attempting to distinguish Teamsters, the panel claims that the Supreme Court merely held that courts must "usually conduct" individualized hearings to determine the scope of individual relief. Slip op. at 1369 (quoting Teamsters).

The panel's decision also violates the Rules Enabling Act, which provides that "general rules of practice and procedure . . . shall not abridge, enlarge or modify any substantive right." 28 U.S.C. § 2072(a)-(b). Under the panel's decision, employers would face liability for employment decisions they could readily defend if the claims were brought in the context of an individual action. The panel's decision thus fundamentally alters the substantive rights and burdens that would otherwise obtain in an individual action.²

That language is inapposite where, as here, the scope of any "individual relief" cannot be determined without individualized hearings. As discussed above, Teamsters makes plain that such individualized determinations are required. Indeed, the Court there rejected claims that the evidence demonstrated a classwide desire for the jobs at issue, and held that plaintiff had to prove entitlement to relief "with respect to each specific individual, at the remedial hearings to be conducted by the District Court." 431 U.S. at 371 (emphasis added).

Carnegie v. Household Int'l, Inc., 376 F.3d 656 (7th Cir. 2004), is similarly unavailing. Although Carnegie recognized that "imaginative solutions" to complex damages issues might be appropriate, the examples it offered contemplated individualized proof, including: (1) bifurcating liability and damages; (2) "appointing a magistrate judge or special master to preside over individual damages proceedings"; (3) conducting a liability trial, then decertifying the class and providing notice to class members regarding how they may individually prove damages; (4) creating subclasses; or (5) amending the class. Id. at 661 (quoting In re Visa Check/MasterMoney Antitrust Litigation, 280 F.3d 124, 141 (2d Cir. 2001)).

² To the extent Pettway v. American Cast Iron Pipe Co., 494 F.2d 211 (5th Cir. 1974) and its progeny permit monetary relief to be awarded absent the opportunity for the employer to present individualized defenses, they too are inconsistent with Teamsters and violate the Rules Enabling Act.

II. IF ALLOWED TO STAND, THE PANEL'S DECISION WILL COERCE SETTLEMENTS AND SUBVERT THE PURPOSES OF TITLE VII

If permitted to stand, the panel's decision will have two predictable effects. First, it will create strong pressures on employers to settle, even when the lawsuits they face lack merit. Courts have long recognized that class actions may unduly pressure a defendant to settle regardless of the suit's merits. See, e.g., Castano v. Am. Tobacco Co., 84 F.3d 734, 746 (5th Cir. 1996) ("These settlements have been referred to as judicial blackmail."). This pressure is intensified when an employer has no opportunity to present evidence in its own defense.

Second, the panel decision will encourage employers to adopt the kinds of quota-like policies Title VII was adopted to prevent. If employers are denied an opportunity to present evidence demonstrating that their actions were lawful, then they can only avoid liability by making it impossible for any plaintiff to establish a prima facie case of discrimination in the first place. This can only mean ensuring there is no way to produce any kind of statistical case that their policies have a statistically disparate effect. But satisfying this standard would take employers well beyond the legitimate and necessary exercise of policing their employment policies and practices for true discrimination. As a plurality of the Supreme Court has observed,

It is completely unrealistic to assume that unlawful discrimination is the sole cause of people failing to gravitate to jobs and employers in accord with the laws of chance. It would be equally unrealistic to suppose that employers can eliminate, or discover and explain, the myriad of innocent causes that may lead to statistical imbalances in the composition of their work forces.

Watson v. Ft. Worth Bank & Trust, 487 U.S. 977, 992 (1988) (plurality op.)

(citation omitted). Unable to avoid lawsuits by aggressively rooting out true discrimination, employers may be pressured to adopt “inappropriate prophylactic measures.” As the plurality also observed,

If quotas and preferential treatment become the only cost-effective means of avoiding expensive litigation and potentially catastrophic liability, such measures will be widely adopted. The prudent employer will be careful to ensure that its programs are discussed in euphemistic terms, but will be equally careful to ensure that the quotas are met.

Id. at 993. This result would be intolerable, because “[p]referential treatment and the use of quotas by public employers ... can violate the Constitution, and it has long been recognized that legal rules leaving any class of employers with little choice but to adopt such measures would be far from the intent of Title VII.” Id. (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). Yet this intolerable result is precisely what the panel decision in this case will bring about. The Court should grant rehearing en banc to prevent these perverse and destructive results.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated, this Court should grant Defendant-Appellant's petition for rehearing en banc.

Respectfully submitted,

Evelyn L. Becker
