

Tim Doyle

Vice President of Communications, U.S. Chamber of Commerce

Tim Doyle is vice president of Communications at the U.S. Chamber of Commerce. Utilizing his more than two decades of experience in policy communications and journalism, Doyle helps lead the Chamber's strategic communications, media relations, and integrated communications campaign functions across the Chamber's many policy priorities.

Doyle joined the Chamber from Subject Matter, a creative advocacy agency, and previously held prominent communications positions at Discovery Communications, the Glover Park Group and the Consumer Technology Association. Before transitioning to communications in 2010, he was a reporter for SNL Kagan, Forbes, and Bloomberg News covering the intersection of business and policy. Earlier in his career, he worked for Ask Jeeves Inc. and as a news clerk at The New York Times.

A D.C. native, Doyle earned a B.A. from Boston College and a M.S.J. from Northwestern University's Medill School of Journalism. He lives in suburban Maryland with his wife and three children.
